In the world of Mark Strand's Poetry there is perpetual night. It is perpetually cold, and perpetually empty. The house is empty. The streets are empty. The sky is empty and dark. There is absolutely nothing to be happy about. And in this world there is a man, I believe his name is Mark Strand, he lives in strange dreams.

This New Selected Poems by Mark Strand arrives twenty-five years after his last Selected and explains everything. It is a most impressive introduction to a significant poet. The poems from the early books are typically dark and mysterious; they breathe a natural surrealism that is as different from Lorca's manner as the New World is from the Old.

Strand's collection Man and Camel (2006) contains more playful, witty moments than previous books, though, as Lucas pointed out in his VQR review, its "tension, between what is present and what cannot be touched, continues to be the most consistent theme in Strand's work." New Selected Poems (2007) draws on Strand's work from the previous two decades and is full of "buffoons whom the poet nevertheless loves," wrote Dan Chiasson in the New Yorker, adding "they represent his ...

From 1964, Mark Strand wrote 14 books of poetry, beginning with Sleeping With One Eye Open which was published by Stone Wall Press. His early work is noted for its close association with dreams and dream-logic, while themes of disassociation of self from the world, the passing of time and also the presence of death in life, became more prevalent in his work as it developed.
