Tempt me not at the bottom Of the lake, either for I Hear they drown those who Cannot swim like frogs. But tempt me on the banks, Of a river for I will look, At your shadow in the water, And change into a pebble, And youpick me up and throw Me, on the other side where I can watch your strong arms Fight the downstream current, And get you where I stand.

Let me explain. One of the things about living out of a suitcase is that, after a while, you begin to both crave permanence, and also to be wary of it. To buy something for the home is to claim permanence, and to do that is to tempt fate. It wasn't long after my children got me my first proper kitchen knife that I got thrown out of the Hovel.
